Introduction

This is Sanjay. I have been working in theatre for the past 10 years, with my main experience spanning theatre, live performance, live events, residencies, and installations. For me, theatre is a multidisciplinary art form—it holds the magic of acting, direction, and storytelling on one side, and the precision of engineering on the other, through lighting, sound, set, and stage design. My practice bridges these worlds.

A big part of my work is product design for performance. It is creating sets, props, costumes, and technical tools as modular elements that can be built within budget, transported across cities or countries, and reused seamlessly from show to show. Designing sets that can open fast, pack down neatly, travel light, and survive the road—this is where my engineering and logistical skills meet creativity.

Alongside design, I have worked extensively in production management and residency management—two distinct aspects of my practice. In production management, I have coordinated rehearsals, artist logistics, rehearsal notes, venue bookings, and the journey of a production from rehearsal stage to show stage, bringing together artists and technical teams. In residency management, I have planned and executed residencies that shape the workflow of artists and technicians. I have also managed festivals, where international and national performances converge with their own technical and logistical needs. In these roles, I have assessed both technical requirements and artist needs, sourced vendors locally to recreate sets or props that are too heavy to transport, overseen their handover to artists, and often collaborated with them to build or source elements on-site in India.

Over the past two years, I have also worked as an upcycling and installation artist, creating installations and tech-art works in collaboration with groups. In addition, I have designed performance spaces, exploring ways to transform non-conventional venues into live performance spaces and also designing a full-fledged auditorium.
